Jeff Bransford, a vagabond cowpuncher, returns to his father's home after several years. Miriam's pleasure at seeing Jeff cheers him up, as it was because of her he left Rainbow Ridge. In San Luis, Rufus Coulter evicts a widow and her family from their home. Feeling Miriam may have relented, Jeff again proposes, but she tells him that she will not marry him until he has accomplished something. Miriam tells him she will be at the mask ball in San Luis the following night. Jeff continues his journey. He finds his ranch deserted except for old Leo Ballinger who tells Jeff Coulter threatens to foreclose a twenty-thousand dollar mortgage on the ranch. Major Parker, a large ranch owner, and Miriam's brother-in-law, neglects his pretty wife, Elinor. Bert Rawlins, an idler from the east, has nearly won the wife's consent to an elopement. Miriam alone, is aware of her sister's intrigue.

Jeff arrives at Coulter's office and bawls him out. Coulter, hires Brazos, a notorious gunman, to kill Jeff. On the evening of the dance several things happen. Major Parker places twentyethousand dollars in a trunk for safe keeping; Jeff finds that Rawlins and Mrs. Parker plan to elope during the evening; and Brazos stations himself to ambush Jeff. Jeff enters just as the guests remove their masks. Knowing that if he is to stop the elopement, he must act at once, Jeff excuses himself. Jeff avoids the gunman's bullet and kills the bully in his tracks. He gallops to the ranch of Major Parker and dissuades the wife from her mad elopement. Jeff learns that Rawlins has stolen Parker's twenty-thousand dollars and decamped. As Jeff leaves in pursuit, Major Parker returns and sees him. He suspects Jeff who cannot clear himself without exposing Elinor. Rawlins' is killed and robbed by Romero and Gomez, two Mexican bandits. Major Parker heads a posse to capture Jeff and he is soon found and held for trial. Jeff escapes to a hiding place in the hills. Miriam takes him food and is caught by Romero and Gomez. They are about to force their attentions on the girl when Jeff returns unexpectedly. The bandits are killed as Parker and his men ride up. Parker finds the money on Romero's body. Miriam now feels Jeff has done something big and tells him of her love.
